

Sierra Rotakhina joined the Board in October, 2013. Sierra conducts policy analysis and research for health impact reviews, as well as research support for the Board of Health and the Governor's Interagency Council on Health Disparities.

Sierra received her bachelor of science degree in health science from Saint Mary's College of California and her master of public health degree from the University of Washington in the Community Oriented Public Health Practice (COPHP) program.

Prior to joining the Board Sierra worked in health education programming with community-based organizations. Most recently Sierra worked with local health jurisdictions and the University of Washington doing health equity work, mixed methods research, emergency preparedness, and policy analysis.