

Originally from Alaska, Kelly Gilmore has been a Washington state resident for 12 years. Kelly completed her Bachelors at the Evergreen State College in Olympia where she studied freshwater ecology and hydrology. Her background is primarily in family planning, and adolescent health.

In June she completed her Master in Public Health at the University of Washington, in the Community-Oriented Public Health Practice program. Her graduate research evaluated the provision of long-acting reversible contraceptive methods in Seattle area school-based health centers as a teen pregnancy intervention.

Kelly has experience in communications, healthcare, and education. She also works as a research assistant part time at Seattle Children's Research Institute in the Child, Health, Behavior and Development department. Kelly will be conducting research and policy analysis to support the Board's Health Impact Review work through the 2015 legislative session. She is very excited about this opportunity to work with the Board of Health!
